Good news

The news that a new company will probably move into Carbondale to take over the Tioga Plant is certainly good news.

The company, Glass Products, Inc. of New Jersey, has grown so fast in the two short years it has existed that if the deal is sealed in November as planned, a bright future for the company in the Pioneer City is expected.

This move is a very important one for the city. A company has decided to invest in Carbondale because of its assets--a good labor pool, adequate facilities for industrial operation and cooperating organizations which were essential in working together to get financial deals approved to make the proposed move possible.

Although things are looking very good, there is just a small chance that the deal won't go through. So people shouldn't get their hopes up too high until the deal is complete. But if the deal is complete, as officials say it probably will, the city can use the move to try and attract other industries to locate here.

To insure the deal goes through, those people who have helped publicly and behind the scenes will undoubtedly be making sure details are being taken care of. And that's good, because who knows what else can be done in Carbondale and the surrounding area to attract new industries and get the local economy back on its feet.
